

A black and white photograph showing a rocky, uneven terrain. In the upper right, there is a section of ground with a distinct, repeating hexagonal or honeycomb-like pattern, possibly a natural rock formation or a man-made structure. The rest of the ground is covered with various sized rocks and pebbles. A white scale bar with black markings is positioned horizontally in the lower-middle part of the image. Below the scale bar is a small white rectangular label with black text. To the left of the main rocky area, there is a vertical strip of lighter-colored material, possibly a wall or a piece of fabric, partially visible.
